A person wearing blue jeans is captured in mid-air, jumping over a road. A large puddle on the road reflects the scene, including the person, the trees, and the sky. In the background, a white van is driving on the road, and there are several tall evergreen trees lining the street under a blue sky with scattered clouds.

Being predictable just isn't my thing. I don't like to stay put. I like to follow the sun as it shines in my east windows, and then travels to the south. I like to follow the activity around me, too—or sometimes avoid it. I like to get a change of scene to keep my mind and ideas fresh. If everything had wheels and complete mobility I'd be happy. Jack knows me.

Hard working and tidy.
Jack is both.

Jack is just as easy to love as your favorite anytime-anywhere pair of shoes. Jack flies solo or teams up with others. It provides a spacious surface then neatly folds and nests in the smallest of spaces—not a claustrophobic one in the bunch. And it's so user friendly that both sizes require just one person to flip the table open or closed (but we fully support team efforts). With casters that encourage you to keep on the move, the user—not the table—has everything to say about the where and how.
